

HE CAME FOR EVERY PART OF ME

*A Healing Workbook for Those Who Carry More Than One
Story*

BY KRISTY MOORE

Dedication

*To the ones who learned to smile while silently breaking.
To the ones who kept surviving when they wanted to stop.
To the little ones inside who hid in the shadows, waiting for safety to come.
To the protectors who carried the weight of the world so the others could breathe.*

This is for you.

For every fragment, every scar, every part you thought was unworthy of love.

Jesus sees you.

Jesus loves you with a love that asks for nothing in return, a love that will never leave, never grow cold, and never turn away.

A love that does not need you to earn it, fix yourself for it, or prove you deserve it.

This is the love that's coming for every part of you — the loud parts, the quiet parts, the hurting parts, and the hidden ones. Because His love is unconditional. It is not like human love. It does not change. It cannot fail.

You are safe here.

You are home.

Title: He Came for Every Part of Me

Preface

Dear Reader,

If you are holding this book in your hands, I want you to know—this is not just a story. This is a rescue mission. A healing journey. A living testimony of what Jesus can do when you have reached the end of yourself... and the only thing left is Him. I did not grow up knowing the Lord. Satan introduced himself to me early twisting my thoughts, distorting my worth, ripping away my innocence. Throughout my life I was convinced I was too broken, too much, too far gone. Living in survival mode became normal. What I did not know then was that trauma had split my soul into pieces. Pieces I could not see, or hear, or remember. Parts of me—called alters—were created to hold the pain I could not bear. And they did. They locked it all away, carrying the memories for me so I could grow up. And for a long time... I did not remember. I had just enough fragments to know terrible things had happened, but not enough to put the story together. I even prayed that God would never let me remember what really happened. But just because the memories were hidden did not mean I was not affected. Because trauma does not just disappear—it lives in your body. What I thought was “normal,” because it was all I knew was just a damaged, broken, lost, scared child doing her best to survive in a world that never taught her what healthy love looked like.

Back then, I did not understand how important I was to the Lord. I had no idea that through everything I endured, He was with me. I was never truly alone. He protected me from torment by creating various parts of me to hold the pain. He was always coming for me—not because I deserved it, but because I was His daughter. And a good Father never stops fighting for a relationship with His child. He was never going to give up on me. Just like He will never give up on you. Throughout my young life, He sent His messengers to plant seeds in my heart. At age 12, one of them gave me a Bible. I shoved it under my bed. I did not understand what it was. I was not ready yet. But Jesus was already coming for me. At 21, He came to me in a dream. The love I felt in His presence was like nothing I had ever known. He did not come to shame me. He came to call me home. He told me that the Bible I had hidden was His gift to me. And if I opened it, I would find the truth—and the truth would set me free. At 31, He sent another messenger—a woman in line at Target who told me how much Jesus loved me. I thought she was a little strange at the time. But I think now she is an angel. Not a day has gone by that I have not thought of her. The way she looked at me—as if she knew how much pain I was in—still echoes in my heart. “Jesus loves you. He loves you so much.” Those words replayed in my mind daily.

They sank deep, penetrating my soul, repeating repeatedly until I finally believed them. Even though I had accepted Jesus as my Savior, I still did not know how to have a real relationship with Him. No one had shown me. People would say, “Just read your Bible.” And I did—but no matter how hard I tried, I never felt good enough. I saw God as too big and myself as too small—just an insignificant girl in a small town.

Everywhere I looked, everyone else seemed to be doing life better. They seemed like “better Christians.” On the outside, I looked like I had it all together. But inside, there was a war raging for my soul. Satan was not fighting fair. He tormented me daily. But Jesus was fighting too. And eventually—He came for every one of my parts. I had no idea how much healing I needed. I had no idea what I had survived. I did not know I had alters. I did not know I was dissociating every day. But Jesus knew.

All I knew was how to survive—how to adapt to situations. If life got too hard, I unknowingly created a new part to handle it. Dissociation—creating alters—was a brilliant coping strategy. I had no idea I was even doing it. Even though the Lord gave me this ability for survival, it came with many challenges. The Lord never intended me to lean on my alters forever—He wanted all of us to lean on Him. When I accepted Jesus as my Lord and Savior, I thought that would fix everything. But instead, I used Him as an excuse—justifying my pain, excusing my behavior. I would say, “I did not know any other way... I am doing the best I can.” And while there was truth in that, what I did not yet understand was this: God’s love does not just forgive us—it heals us. I did not know His love could change me. I did not know it was not something I had to strive for, or prove worthy of. I did not know His love was freely given—unconditionally offered. And that the moment I was ready to face the trauma that kept me stuck...

That love would meet me there. From age 21 on, He was preparing me. I went to church. I served in youth ministry. I did all the good “Christian” things. I prayed hard. I read the Bible. I tried to be good. But no matter how hard I tried, I could not break the cycle. I still felt like I was ruining everything. No one told me the truth: Good behavior does not heal trauma. Jesus does. When I turned forty, He started to open the vault. Not all at once. He was gentle. He unraveled the pain layer by layer, memory by memory, altar by altar. It was terrifying. It was disorienting. It tested every ounce of my strength. But He never left. And He never will. It has been over nine years since that first uncovering. There was a lot of trauma to heal, and it took time. The real breakthrough came when the Lord revealed that His love could penetrate every bit of my brokenness. I am still healing. But I am no longer hiding. Jesus sat with my alters. He held my rage. He comforted the child inside me. He walked into the places of my soul I thought even God would not enter... And He refused to leave.

Now, He is using me to author this story. To tell the truth. To pull back the curtain on trauma, dissociation, and hidden pain. Because He does not want you stuck either. He does not want your children to inherit your silence. He does not want your marriage to die under the weight of what was never spoken. He does not want your faith to be performative. He wants your faith to be healing. And friend, hear me clearly—I am like you. Jesus does not love me more than He loves you. What He did for me; He wants to do for you. Is it hard? Yes. Will it take you into the deepest, most wounded places of your story? Absolutely. But is it worth it? Yes. A thousand times yes. Because I have seen what happens when you stop trying to fix yourself and allow Him to engulf you in His unconditional love. I have experienced peace I never had. I have found my worth—and it is not in a person. I do not have to prove myself to anyone.

The only One whose opinion matters is Jesus... And He already says I am fearfully and wonderfully made. The love He has for me did not change because I got healed. It did not grow because I finally listened. He has always loved me this much. The difference is... now I believe it. Now, I love myself. And because I love myself, I can finally love others. How can you offer love to anyone else if you do not believe you are worthy of it yourself? Jesus taught me how to love like He does—unconditionally, no strings attached. Now, I can love someone in their brokenness, in their joy, in their trauma... Because that is how He loves me. The Bible says:

“Whoever wants to be My disciple must deny themselves and take up their cross daily and follow Me. For whoever wants to save their life will lose it, but whoever loses their life for Me will save it.” – Luke 9:23–24

I used to read that verse and feel like a failure. No matter how hard I tried, I could not measure up. But now I understand dying to self does not mean striving harder. It means surrendering to the One who already finished the work. I have watched generational chains fall to the ground. Jesus did not just heal me—He is healing my bloodline. And now I am here, offering you my heart on these pages—Not as someone who has it all together, But as someone who finally stopped hiding. You are not too broken. You are not too far gone. And you are not alone. He sees every part of you. And He is not leaving without you.

With all my love,

Kristy Moore

PART ONE - Telling the Truth

■ Devotional Reflection

There's a sacred kind of courage in simply telling the truth.

For years, maybe even decades, you've carried stories that felt too heavy to say out loud, stories tangled in shame, confusion, and fear.

But healing begins where hiding ends. Not all at once, and not without trembling, but in small, honest steps.

You don't have to share your story with everyone. But you do need to tell the truth to yourself and to Jesus.

He already knows. And He's not ashamed of you.

He sees the little one who didn't have a voice, the teenager who had to survive, the adult who still doesn't have all the answers.

You don't have to clean it up to make it acceptable. Jesus doesn't need a polished version.

He just wants the real one. The messy one. The honest one.

This isn't about blame. It's about freedom.

And it starts with this:

"This is what happened."

"This is how it felt."

"This is what it did to me."

And then, "Jesus, where were You?"

He's not afraid to go there. He already has. And He's waiting to walk through it with you now.

■ Scripture Meditation

"Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free."

— John 8:32

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes. Imagine a safe, quiet room.

You're not alone. Jesus is sitting across from you, gentle, patient, kind.

He's not rushing you. In His eyes, there is no judgment. Only love.

In your lap is a journal. On the cover it says: "My Truth."

You open it. The pages are blank.

You look at Jesus. He nods. You begin to write.

There is no pressure to get it all out at once. Just one sentence. One truth.

He leans in and listens.

He's not surprised. He's not pulling away. He's staying.

Stay there as long as you need.

■ Journal Prompts

☐ What is one truth I've been afraid to say out loud?

☐ What would it feel like to stop hiding that part of my story?

☐ What do I fear will happen if I tell the truth?

☐ What kind of comfort or safety am I hoping to find in Jesus right now?

☐ What do I need Him to say to that younger version of me?

■ Me to Me

Write to the part of you who has been holding this truth inside.

Tell her/him they are safe now and that Jesus is with her/him.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, I have carried this truth in silence, sometimes even from myself.

Today, I choose to bring it into the light with You.

Help me to feel Your presence as I speak it.

Take the weight from my heart and replace it with Your peace. Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Be still. Listen. Let Him respond to the truth you've shared. Write down what you hear.

PART TWO - I Didn't Know I Was Still Surviving

■ Devotional Reflection

I didn't know I was still surviving. I had a job. I had a smile. I said the right things.

But I didn't feel safe in my own body. Sometimes healing doesn't look like a breakdown, it looks like suddenly realizing you've never felt safe.

I thought peace was for other people. I didn't know it was something I could live in too.

And it wasn't until love came close, until Jesus came close, that the cracks started to show.

Not to shame me, but to show me where I was still living like I had to protect myself.

If this is you, this section is your mirror.

It's your invitation to stop surviving and start living, held, loved, and seen.

■ Scripture Meditation

“Come to Me, all who are weary and burdened, and I will give you rest.”

— Matthew 11:28

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes.

Imagine standing in a quiet hallway, the kind of hallway you’ve walked alone a thousand times.

You look strong, put together, capable. But on the inside... there’s a wall. High. Silent. Built from years of needing to be okay.

Now picture Jesus. He’s not at the end of the hall yelling. He’s not kicking in the wall.

He’s beside you. Close. Gentle. He reaches out and places His hand on that wall.

He’s not asking for all of it right now. He’s asking for one brick.

Which one are you ready to give Him?

■ Journal Prompts

☐ What are the ways I’m still surviving?

☐ What kind of wall have I built?

☐ When did I first learn I had to be strong?

☐ What would it feel like to not have to protect myself anymore?

☐ What would it mean to actually live instead of surviving?

■ Me to Me

Speak to the one inside you who's been holding it together for so long.

Let her/him know they do not have too anymore. Let her/him know you're here now, and so is Jesus.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, I've been surviving for so long, I forgot what living feels like.

I've built walls to protect myself, but they've also kept You out.

Today I give You one brick. One memory. One reaction. One belief.

I want to rest. I want to heal. Show me how. In Jesus' name, Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Be still. Listen. Let Him speak to the one who's been surviving. Write down what you hear.

PART THREE - Trauma Brain

■ Devotional Reflection

There's a part of me that doesn't know the war is over.

It still hears the bombs, still hides in the corner, still scans every face and tone of voice for danger.

It doesn't know how to relax, because relaxing never felt safe.

That part has one job: survive. And it's been doing it flawlessly, even if it costs me peace, connection, or understanding.

This part doesn't care about making sense, it cares about making it out alive.

It stores every hurt like a file, ready to pull out for comparison whenever something feels even slightly familiar.

It's fast, too fast to slow down and ask if what it's sensing is real.

It builds walls. It locks doors. It shuts out even the people who care.

Not because it wants to, but because it doesn't know how to do anything else yet.

That's trauma brain. And it's not broken, it's brilliant.

But it's tiring.

It's starting to realize that maybe there's more than one way to survive.

Maybe it doesn't have to measure every moment against the past.

Maybe it can learn something new.

The first step is compassion.

You don't shame a soldier for being jumpy after the war, you sit beside them gently show them the truth and invite them into peace.

■ Scripture Meditation

"The Lord is my rock, my fortress and my deliverer; my God is my rock, in whom I take refuge, my shield and the horn of my salvation, my stronghold."

— Psalm 18:2

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes.

Picture a tall tower standing high above the ground. Inside, there's a part of you stationed at the very top.

She/He is always scanning the horizon, looking for danger, reading every shift in light, every sound, every movement below.

Her/His eyes never rest. Her/His posture is tense. Her/His hands grip the railing.

She/He believes if she/he stops watching, something terrible will happen.

Now picture Jesus climbing the stairs to where she/he stands.

He does not demand she/he leave her post. He steps beside her/him and looks out over the horizon with her/him.

He says gently, "I see why you have been standing here so long. You have kept watch, because no one else did. But I am here now, and I will not leave."

Slowly, she/he lets her/his shoulders drop.

For the first time, she/he notices the sun warming her/his face.

She/He realizes the horizon is clear, no danger in sight.

■ Journal Prompts

☐ What does my “trauma brain” do to keep me safe?

☐ When did I first notice these defense patterns?

☐ How does Jesus want to help this part of me rest?

☐ What would feel safe enough for me to lower my guard?

☐ How would my relationships change if this part of me felt secure?

■ Me to Me

Write a letter to the part of you in the tower.

Thank her/him for how she/he has protected you and invite her/him to consider letting Jesus take a shift at watch.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, thank You for creating a brain that knows how to survive.

Thank You for the parts of me that have stood watch and kept me safe.

I ask You now to show them they can rest.

Let them feel Your presence so strongly that they know they are no longer alone.

Be my protector and my peace. Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Listen for what Jesus says to the part of you who has been on guard for so long.

Write down what you hear.

LETTING LOVE IN

PART FOUR - Letting Love In

■ Devotional Reflection

Love sounds beautiful until it shows up and knocks on the door you swore no one would ever open again.

You say you want love, but then it gets too close. Too kind. Too safe. And something inside you panics.

Because love never used to mean safety.

Love meant control.

Love meant prove yourself.

Love meant keeping quiet, so they do not leave. Now, when love comes near, your heart whispers yes while your nervous system screams danger.

This section is not about forcing love in. It is about being honest with the parts of you that are afraid of it, the ones who have learned that closeness comes with a cost. It is about letting Jesus into that space, not to push or demand, but to help you feel safe enough to receive what He has been offering all along.

Real love does not pressure. It does not manipulate. It holds, it sees, it stays. And Jesus is not in a hurry. He will wait outside the door as long as it takes for you to say yes.

■ Scripture Meditation

“There is no fear in love. But perfect love drives out fear...”

1 John 4:18

Perfect love does not shove its way in. It sits with you, in the fear, until it melts away.

It does not demand you earn it. It simply says, You are already mine.

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes.

You are standing in a quiet hallway, facing a heavy wooden door.

It is yours, the one you have kept locked for years. Behind it are the places no one has entered.

On the other side, you hear the soft sound of someone sitting down. You know that voice.

It is Jesus.

He does not pound on the door. He does not demand you open it.

Instead, He speaks your name with such tenderness that it makes your chest ache.

“I am here,” He says. “I am not going anywhere.”

Something inside you shifts. You walk closer and place your hand on the lock.

You do not have to throw the door wide open, just enough for light to spill through the crack.

Through the gap, you see His eyes. They are steady. Warm. Safe.

He smiles.

“Thank you for letting Me in, even just this much,” He says.

You realize love is not here to hurt you. It is here to stay.

■ Journal Prompts

☐ What do I believe love means?

☐ Who taught me that love was not safe?

☐ When was the first time love felt like control?

☐ What do I want love to look like now?

☐ What would it feel like to be fully seen and not rejected?

■ Me to Me

Write a letter to the part of you that is afraid to be loved.

Not to fix her/him, but to sit with her/him. Let her/him know she/he is not bad for being scared.

Tell her/him they are worth the wait.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, I want to let You in. But sometimes love still feels like a trick.

Show me what love really is. Show me that I do not have to hide anymore.

Help the parts of me who have only known pain when love came near.

Come close, but only as close as I can handle.

Thank You for being patient with me.

In Your love, Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Ask Him:

“Jesus, what does Your love feel like?”

“Can I trust You in the places I have never let anyone in?”

Be still. Let Him respond. Write what you hear.

This image shows a blank sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and extend across the width of the page. There are no margins, text, or other markings on the paper.

PART 5 - Meeting the Little Ones in the Meadow

■ Devotional Reflection

There are parts of you who still live in the memory. They do not know time has passed. They do not know you made it out. They do not know it is safe yet.

Some are hiding in closets. Others are curled up on the floor, still shaking from what happened.

These are the little ones, the child parts of you who split off to carry what no child should ever have to hold.

They do not need fixing.

They need seeing.

They do not need a lecture.

They need presence.

They need Jesus.

This section is about gently meeting them. Not pulling them forward but inviting them into a safe place.

Let the meadow be that place.

Let it become your sacred meeting ground.

■ Scripture Meditation

“Let the little children come to Me... for the Kingdom of Heaven belongs to such as these.” Matthew 19:14

Jesus did not just tolerate children. He welcomed them. He stopped everything to be near them. He knew they held something sacred.

Your little ones hold sacred things, too your innocence, your purity, your story.

And He wants to sit with them.

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes.

You are walking into the meadow, a wide, open field where the sky looks like cotton candy, painted with soft pinks and golds. The grass beneath your feet is made of tiny flowers that release the scent of spring when you walk.

Sunlight pours down like warm honey, and a gentle breeze carries the sound of water.

You follow it until you see a crystal-clear river, the River of Life, flowing gently through the meadow. Beside it stands the great Healing Tree, its branches stretching wide, heavy with leaves that shimmer like they have been kissed by heaven.

Under the shade of the tree, Jesus is waiting. He is not rushing you. He is smiling. You feel His gaze, warm, steady, safe.

You notice movement in the distance. A small figure, hesitant, watching.

It is one of your little ones. She/He may be hiding behind the tree trunk or standing at the water's edge. She/He might look scared, shy, or unsure if she/he can trust. That is okay.

You do not have to force anything.

You simply sit down on the soft grass and let her/him come when she/he is ready. When she/he does, open your heart.

Let her/him talk. Let her/him cry. Let her/him be held.

And when she/him is ready, gently ask if she/he wants to meet Jesus. Then... step back. Watch Him kneel beside her/him, take her/his hand, and wash her/him in the living water of the river. See the fear leave her/his eyes as she/he begins to understand, she/he is safe.

She/he is loved.

■ Journal Prompts

☐ What did I see in the meadow?

☐ Who was the little one that appeared?

☐ How old is she/he?

☐ What does she/he believe?

☐ What did she/he need from me? From Jesus?

■ Me to Me

Write directly to the little one you met in the meadow. Let her/him know she/he is safe now.

Tell her/him you are here. Jesus is here.

She/He does not have to hide anymore.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, thank You for loving every part of me, including the little ones. Thank You for sitting in the places I did not think You would go. Help me create safety for the parts of me that still feel stuck. Help me slow down and listen. Help me not rush their healing. Bring light into every closet, every corner, every memory. Teach me how to be present like You are.

In Your gentle name, Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Ask Jesus what He wants your little one to know. Write what you hear. Let it be simple. Let it be sacred.

PART SIX: What If I Really Get Better?

■ Devotional Reflection

Healing isn't just about what you're leaving behind. It's about what you're stepping into. That's the part no one really talks about—the fear that can come with freedom.

What if I really get better?

What if I don't need to be needed?

What if I stop apologizing for existing?

What if I stop holding back who I am to make others more comfortable?

This section is a sacred space to explore the fear of thriving. Because healing was never meant to be a return to who you were. It's a becoming. And you don't have to be afraid of her/him.

■ Scripture Meditation

"Behold, I am doing a new thing; now it springs forth, do you not perceive it?" — Isaiah 43:19

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes.

Imagine yourself walking through a garden. The soil is soft beneath your feet. The air smells like hope.

You notice a version of you standing ahead. She/He is not hiding. She/He is not afraid. She/He is vibrant. Alive. Free.

What is she/he wearing?

What is she/he doing?

She/He turns and sees you. Smiles. She/He knows you're coming. She/He has been waiting.

■ Journal Prompts

☐ What does the healed version of me look like?

☐ What is she/he not afraid to say?

☐ What is she/he free from?

☐ What kind of boundaries does she/he have?

☐ What does she/he believe she's/he's worthy of?

■ Me to Me

Write a letter to the part of you who's scared to thrive. Reassure her/he that it's safe to shine now.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, I've spent so long preparing for disappointment, I forgot how to make room for joy. Help me step into the newness without fear. Help me believe that I can be whole, happy, and still held. Give me courage to trust the version of me You already see. In Jesus' name, Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Be still. Listen. Let Him speak to the part of you that's afraid to thrive. Write down what you hear.

PART SEVEN: The Inner World Is Not Crazy—It Is Sacred

■ Devotional Reflection

The world may not understand what it means to have parts. To hear voices inside. To feel like more than one version of you exists at once. But Jesus does. He never called you crazy. He called you His. Your inner world is not a defect. It is a design built for survival. When life was too much to hold, your mind made a way. These parts—the angry one, the little one, the protector, the numb one—they are not here to destroy you. They are here to be known. And Jesus wants to meet each one. Not just the ‘functional’ you. All of you. He walks through the corridors of your inner world like its holy ground. Because it is.

■ Scripture Meditation

“You hem me in—behind and before; You have laid Your hand upon me.” — Psalm 139:5

He knows every part of your system. Every split. Every part. Every memory that’s hidden in the folds of your soul. And He doesn’t run away. He lays His hand gently over all of it. Behind and before. He sees the whole picture—and He stays.

■ Guided Visualization

Close your eyes. Imagine a great hallway inside your mind. Along the hallway are many doors—some open, some locked, some barricaded shut. Jesus stands beside you with a lantern. His light is soft, not harsh. He does not rush. He does not demand. He simply asks: “Can we visit one room together?” You walk to a door. One that feels important. As you reach for the handle, Jesus places His hand on yours. He’s with you. Now... open the door.

■ Journal Prompt

What does my inner world look like? What parts live there? Which part am I afraid to face? What door did I open with Jesus today? What did we find inside?

■ Me to Me

Write to a part of you that has felt misunderstood or unseen. Tell them what you now know: they are not crazy. They are sacred. Let them feel your presence.

■ Guided Prayer

Jesus, sometimes it's easier to stay hurting—because at least I know what to expect. Hope feels risky. Joy feels fragile. But You promised life. Full life. Help me believe that's for me. Help the parts of me that are scared to get better. Show me what healing actually looks like in Your hands. And teach me how to walk with You into wholeness. Amen.

■ Jesus Speaks

Sit with Him. Ask: "Jesus, what does life to the full look like for me?" Write whatever He says. Let it be tender. Let it be true.

[illegible]

CLOSING SECTION: The Journey Continues

■ Final Reflection

If you're reading this, take a breath, deep and sacred. You made it. Through shadows and storms. Through memories that begged to be forgotten and parts that whispered to be known. You came here with courage. And you didn't walk alone.

Jesus met you in the places no one else could reach. In the silence. In the mess. In the hidden corners of your heart. He came. Every single time. Not to judge, but to sit with you. To weep with you. To love you back to life.

Maybe you don't feel "done." That's okay, healing isn't a finish line. It's a life we live in. Every moment you choose presence over panic, grace over guilt, love over shame, you're doing the sacred work of restoration. And He's still with you. Keep listening. Keep leaning in. The same Jesus who came for every part of you... will never stop.

■ Scripture Meditation

"He restores my soul." — Psalm 23:3

Restoration doesn't always look like fireworks. Sometimes, it's the strength to take the next breath. Sometimes, it's the softness to rest when you used to run. It's the quiet moment you choose to believe you are loved, just as you are. He is restoring you, in His time, His way, and always with love.

■ Letter from Me to You

Dear Beloved One,

If this book has been in your hands, then I know something holy has passed through them, your truth. Your tears. Your voice. Your courage. You didn't just fill out a workbook, you showed up for yourself in the most sacred way. I wrote this out of the rawest corners of my story, where I once believed I was too far gone. But Jesus came for those places, and I want you to know He will come for yours too.

I know what it feels like to be afraid of your own thoughts. To wonder if you'll ever be whole. To carry shame for simply surviving. But I also know what it feels like to be met by Love so gentle, so present, that the shame loses its grip. You are not too broken. Not too far gone. Not too much.

You are seen. You are known. You are deeply, wildly, eternally loved.

Keep going. Keep meeting your parts with kindness. Keep trusting that healing is possible, even when it comes slow. Jesus is not finished with your story. He's just getting started.

With all my heart,

Kristy

■ Final Blessing

Jesus, thank You for meeting us in the broken places. Thank You for the parts that came into the light, and the ones still waiting. Thank You for Your relentless love, the kind that sees the whole story and stays.

Bless this reader. Bless their memories, their hopes, their healing. Wrap every fractured piece in Your peace. Remind them they are not alone. When they forget who they are, remind them they are Yours. In Your holy name, Amen.
